"COUNT" ZUBOF'S SUICIDE. HE KILLS HIMSELF IN A JEFFERSON

ME HAD BEEN ARRESTED ON COMPLAINT OF THE PROPRIETOR OF THE CAMBRIDGE JUST AS HE WAS ABOUT TO SAIL FOR EUROPE

MARKET PRISON CELL

-HIS CHECKERED CAREER. On the eve of his expected departure for Europe, Roman Ivanovitch Zubof, or Reuben Lipman as he was also called, and known at New-York hotels as "the Count," was arrested yesterday, and several hours later, when left alone in & cell at Jefferson Market Prison to brood ever the disgrace and mortification of imprisenment, committed suicide by tying his silk handkerchief around his neck and fastening it to the bars of the iron door, ending a life checkered with many ventures, from swindling persons while parating before society as a literary and religious man to uttering false checks in defrauding hotel proprietors. A glamour of romance is thrown around the suicide by the decisration of a friend of "the Count" that the disgrace of his situation, which impelled the gisoner to self-destruction, was felt all the gere keenly by him on account of his engagement to the daughter of a wealthy banker in Zubof had intended to sail for Southampton yesterday morning, and engaged passage on the New-York. He was in arrears to the extent of $250 in his account with the Hotel Cambridge, at Fifth-ave, and Thirty-third-st. Henry Walters learned of the "Count's" intention to sail, and half an hour before the time of the New-York's sailing he secured a warrant for his arrest. Walters, accompanied by Detectives Dugan and Mc-Guckin, appeared at the Fulton-st. pier just as the lines were being cast off and the vessel was ready to start. The three rushed up the gangplank, which was still kept in place for them, and made a quick search of the ship. They hunted through the cabins and searched the decks, but saw nothing of their man. They were about to abandon the hunt and started to leave the vessel, when, as they stepped on the gangplank, they beheld ascending the plank Zubof, weighted with hat boxes and a huge bouquet of flowers. As he advanced he raised his eyes and caught sight of Mr. Walters. He dropped a hatbox and turned deadly pale. Mr. Walters went straight toward him. The other began fumbling at once in his pockets and drew forth a roll of hills. With trembling hands he extracted $250 and extended it toward Walters. "There is some I owe you." he murmured. "Take it and let me go." Mr. Walters was on the point of relenting, but Detective Dugan said no. Zubof pleaded, but the officer was firm. "The Count" was forced to retreat to the pier, where he continued his appeal to be allowed to go. In the course of the discussion the New-York sailed, and the last glimpse which the passengers had of "the Count" was his retreat under the escort of the officers, followed by a curious crowd.

ARRAIGNED IN COURT.

He was taken to Jefferson Market Police Court, where he said that he was a Russian Count, twenty-nine years old. According to Walters, "the Count" had registered at the Hotel Cambridge on December 15 last, and remained there until May 30. He had never paid a cent. When he was requested to make a payment on account he gave a draft for $250 on Edwin Corbin, of Bennett Bros., Detroit, Mich. The paper came back marked "N. G." His hotel bill was then $500. The prisoner pleaded not guilty to the charge of fraud, and Magistrate Deuel committed him to prison for examination this morning. Bail in $500 was allowed, and Zubof immediately called for a messenger to go to Albert Freeman, of No. 3 Park Row. He sent this note: "Dear Freeman: I am arrested. Please call at Jefferson Market Police

The messenger hurried to the office in Park Row, but did not find Mr. Freeman, and left the note. He returned to Jefferson Market Prison cell discovered him hanging from the door The prisoner was cut down immediately, but he was dead. A call was sent to Believue Hospital for an ambulance, but it returned without the

A message for Zubof came just then from Mr. Freeman, who telephoned that he had received the note and would call at once to see him. When Mr. Freeman arrived he was accompanied by two men who refused to give their names. When they were informed of the prisoner's suicide, the two men went to the cell, while Mr. Freeman remained in the courtroom. He said that he could not tell then what would be done with the body, but that he would telegraph to s friend of Zubof in Philadelphia, Mr. Harris, and then he could tell more regarding the funeral arrangements. Later in the day the body was removed from the prison to the

The two men who went to the cell said that Zuhof had been straining every nerve to raise $3,000 to pay off debts. They intimated that if he had succeeded, his prospective marriage would have taken place immediately. They beleved that he killed himself because of the dread that the news of his arrest would be beard by his fiancée and the engagement broken. A LAPSED INSURANCE POLICY.

The two looked over the effects of the dead man. When he was searched before being placed in a cell, a revolver and twenty-five cents were found. The two men found a communication from the Equitable Life Assurance Society informing Zubof that payments on his life policy were overdue. The policy was for $5,000. The letter continued that, as he had failed to pay after an extension of time had been granted, be policy had lapsed and was void. The friends aid that it was intended to pay the premium and thereby make the policy negotiable so that Zubof could obtain a loan upon it, but the plan was not carried out. Mr. Freeman insisted that Zubof was a Russian Count, and that his Parents were living in St. Petersburg. They were cormously wealthy, he said. Zubof called at the Park Row office yesterday morning before going to the steamship pier, Freeman continued. Zubot told him that he was going to Philadel-Zubof told him that he was going to Philadelphia He remarked that he "was short," and showed a draft drawn on George C. Harris, No. 630 Bosre, Philadelphia, for $350. He asked Freeman to cash it. Freeman gave $200 to him, promising to send the rest to Philadelphia. The next that Freeman heard of Zubof was a few hours later when the message arrived from Jefferson Market Police Court. Freeman told about the alleged engagement of Zubof to a wealthy banker's daughter, but whether or not his knowledge of this affair rested solely on representations by "the Count," he refused to any.

From all accounts of Zubof, he was voluble in speech and plausible in address, if not allogether greech and plausible in address, if not altogether pleasing in manner. He was short in stature, of wiry frame, wore long dark hair, a small black mustache and glasses over half-closed eyes. The story of his hotel and other swindles was told years ago, but he had managed to obtain the entre into several first-class hostleries since, and pursued his borrowing tactics among well-known people with unblushing effectives.

pursued his borrowing tactics among well-known people with unblushing effrontery. He came to this country about eight years ago, and was weil known in Boston and Philadelphia. He worked recently on "The Boston Globe." He had several scandalous novels published, writing under the name of "Robert Appieton." Two that caused some sensation were "Mrs. Harry St. John" and "After the Manner of Men."

It was in Boston that he began his first swindling operations after arriving in this country. By his smooth tongue he inveigled himself into the graces of Beacon-st. and Commonwealthave society, posing as a Russian count and member of the famous family of Zubof. He told with picturesque detail of the Caucasus as his birthplace, and among his believers was W. D. Howpicturesque detail of the Caucasus as his birth-place, and among his believers was W. D. How-ella, the author. The "Count" explained his de-barture from his native land by saying that his sympathies with reform forced him into exile. And while the unsuspecting heard and approved, the child of the Caucasus plotted to negotiate the loans which were never returned. Of course, he incurred enmity in some quarters, and the result was the effusion in novels, which were little more than the vehicles of revenge to convey his spite against those who had opposed him.

EXPOSED BY JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY. The late John Boyle O'Reilly exposed Zubof in "The Boston Pilot" as a literary thief, but in spite of this the Russian retained many influential acquaintances.

He first lived at Claremont Park, wherehe gave receptions and teas, to which, however, vastly more prominent people were invited than everatended. He gave several receptions on a more lavish plan at the old Tremont House, where money was spent lavishly for food and flowers. His methods of dressing were extravagant, but otherwise intolerably good taste. Among his books published in Boston, "Mrs. Harry St. John" received considerable sale because it was said that the heroine was a prominent society woman of Boston. In "Mr. Philip St. Clair," "Vera, a Russian Story," and "Violet, an American Sappho," there was more local color than literary merit. A Boston publisher recently said that Zubot tried to have him bring out another book and often said he was never rated at his true worth in Boston. He insisted upon it that he was a true count, driven from Russia by political troubles, but the title always lacked verification. His Tremont House receptions were run on trust, and his bills in Boston were enormous. He was engaged in a quarrel with the landlord, a cripple, was fined one cent without costs for assault and battery. He left Boston after his debts piled up, but returned to do some unimportant newspaper work.

His plagiarism was notorious. At one time he induced a publisher to bring out a translation of Tourgxeneff's "On the Eve" as his own, although he had simply copied the work from another edition. receptions and teas, to which, however, vastly

POSED AS A RELIGIOUS MAN

Turning from literary swindles, he operated among religious people, professing much faith in any creed followed by a possible victim. The exposure of his methods revealed that once he was receiving instructions with a view to conwas receiving instructions with a view to conversion, from a Presbyterian minister, an Episcopalian rector and a Roman Catholic priest all at the same time, and from each of these he obtained sums varying from $50 to $250.

Zubof next turned his attention to checks when the religious game became unprofitable. While in London he forged a check, was arrested and sentenced to a term of imprisonment. At the expiration of his term a compassionate friend gave enough money to him to take him to the United States to begin life anew.

He carried with him letters from William Morris, Stepniak, Katharine Tynan, William Michael

He carried with him letters from William Morris, Stepniak, Katharine Tynan, William Michael Rossetti and others as evidence of his standing in London literary circles. He also represented himself as a graduate of a Russian university. He was a Lithuanian Hebrew, and came from a part of Russia where Hebrew dialect is spoken. Stepniak said of him that he questioned the statement of his university education, because he was unable to speak the Russian language grammatically. When Zubof met Modjeska on one occasion the actress spoke to him in Russian and in French, but the "Count" could not understand her.

When he came to New-York five years ago the account of his swindles had preceded him, and he was forced to remain under cover. A spasm of virtue may have followed, for last fall spasm of virtue may have followed, for last fall he engaged quarters at the Hotel Waldorf, and, according to Mr. West, the hotel detective, the Russian guest deported himself with dignity, never becoming involved in any way in his affairs, either with the house or outside, so far as the observation of the hotel people extended. "Everybody knew him as the Count when he was here," said Mr. West last night. "As he came here like a gentleman, he was received into the house. He had many acquaintances, especially among young men. When he went away his bill was paid in full."

Before coming to this country, Zubof lived in

"BIG SIX'S" ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

Typographical Union No. 6 held an election of officers at Pearl-st, and Park Row yesterday. The voting chapels were in the different offices throughout the city. The polls were opened at Hyland's Hotel at 10 a. m., and remained open until o'clock last night. There was a hot rivalry between the different candidates. Over five thousand ballots were cast. The contest for President was between Samuel B. Donnelly and James M. Duncan. Mr. Donnelly is the present president. Another rivalry was over the selection of delegates to the next international convention of the union at Colorado Springs. Four delegates will be chosen, and there are ten candidates. There was also an and there are ten and the position of secretary-treasurer, the candidates being William Ferguson and Alexander Cook. The nominations for the dif-ferent offices were made during the month.

ROBERT GARRETT DEAD.

THE EX-PRESIDENT OF THE BALTI-MORE AND OHIO PASSES AWAY

AT DEER PARK.

Baltimore, July 29.-Robert Garrett, ex-president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and the head of the widely known banking-house of Robert Garrett & Sons, died this morning at Deer Park, Md. Mr. Garrett had been in poor health since he retired from the presidency of the Baltimore and Ohio system in 1887. In recent years he had been mentally as well as physically, unfit to take part in business. and had seldom been seen in public. His sister, Miss Mary Garrett, and his brother Henry are now the only direct survivors of John W. Garrett, who many years dominated the Baltimore and Ohlo system and got an enormous fortune from it.

Mr. Garrett went to Deer Park about six weeks

Mr. Garrett was seriously ill for only about twelve hours. When he left Uplands for the mountains a little over a month ago, although quite weak, his appetite was good and his physical condition better than it had been for several months. The mountain air greatly benefited him, and his family and friends during the first two weeks of his stay there were very hopeful of his complete restoration to health. At times he was very de-spondent, however, and although he drove out frequently, nothing would relieve him of this melancholia. He sought no society, and saw only mem-bers of his family and intimate friends. His father, John W. Garrett, died at Deer Park under The news of Mr. Garrett's death was announced at the Stock Exchange, where Mr. Garrett had been a member for many years, by President Fahnestock, on first call. A committee was appointed to attend the burial and draft resolutions. Mr. Garrett was a member of Grace Protestant Episcopal Church, Park-ave, and Monument-st., one block from his city home. The Rev. Arthur C. Powell, the rector, will probably conduct the funeral services.

MR. GARRETT'S CAREER.

Robert Garrett was the eldest son of John W ett. He was born in Baltimore on April 9, His father was president of the Baltimore Garrett. and Ohio Railroad Company from 1857 until his death at Deer Park on September 26, 1884. His mother, who was killed by accident in November of the previous year, was a daughter of Thoma. Harrison, an importer. Robert Garrett received his education at Princeton College in the class of 1867. The members of the family have always had a warm regard for this institution, and have made a warm regard for this institution, and have made liberal gifts to its endowment funds.

On leaving college Robert Garrett entered the banking-house of Robert Garrett & Sons, founded by his grandfather in 1839. After T. Harrison Garrett completed his college course he also entered the banking-house, and John W. Garrett gave up the active management of the business to his sons, his railroad interests requiring his entire attention. Robert Garrett found in the extensive business transactions and correspondence of the banking-house opportunities for the study of finance on a large scale, for which he displayed aptitude and capacity.

After about four years in the banking business he became president of the Valley Railroad of Virginia, succeeding General Robert E. Lee, who had resigned to accept the presidency of Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Va. Robert Garrett was called to this, his first railroad place, at the instance of Johns Hopkins, who had made the elder Garrett president of the Ealtimore and Ohlo in 1857. He acceptably discharged the duties of his office until late to the college course to have measured there only a year. In the October number of "The North American Review" of 1879 Mr. Garrett published an able paper entitled "The Railway Problem," in which he reviewed the causes of and suggested certain remedies for the "ruinous and de moralizing" competition between the great trunk line railroads of the country. Some of the measures which he then suggested have been to a great extent embodied in the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

After the death of his father, Mr. Garrett was first made president pro tem. of the Baltimore and Ohio in November, 1884, and subsequently he was elected president. He was then about the same age as was his father when the latter became president of the big corporation. Two notable achievements marked Robert Garrett's presidency of the Baltimore and Ohio. These were the establishment of the Baltimore and Ohio telegraph system and the extension of the line to Philadelphia. Despite a resistance from its great rival, the Pennsylvania Railroad, such as was seldom before encountered by any similar enterprise, at a cost of over $10,-000,000 the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad pushed its way to Philadelphia. The construction of this road and its enormous cost were the result of Robert Garrett's failure to purchase the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad, which is now owned and operated by its competitor. Under Mr Garrett's direction the Baltimore and Ohio secured an entrance into New-York and acquired the Staten Island Rapid Transit system.

HIS TELEGRAPH SYSTEM.

The Baltimore and Ohio telegraph system was established by Mr. Garrett, and was his pet scheme. It was sold out under the administration of President Samuel Spe cer in like manner with the express and sleeping-car departments, which were abandoned by the corporation by reason of the question being raised that their operation was were auditioned by the Corporation by Feason of the question being raised that their operation was in violation of the provision of the company's original charter. Mr. Garrett bitterly opposed the sale of the telegraph lines to the Western Union. Illness and mental trouble had attacked him a short time before this sale was consummated.

During the period in which Mr. Garrett actively participated in business affairs he filled numerous places of trust and responsibility. Among these were the following Member of the Board of Trustees of Johns Hopkins University, president and director of the Baltimore Drydock Company, director in the Consolidated Coal Company of Maryland, director in the National Mechanics' Bank and director in the Merchants and Miners' Transportation Company. He was an incorporator of the American Union Telegraph Company, which was sold to the Western Union when the Vanderbili interests were retired and Jay Gould became the controlling power in the telegraph business of the country.

THE IVES AND STAYNER AFFAIR

THE IVES AND STAYNER AFFAIR.

The position taken by Mr. Garrett in the famous The position taken by Mr. Garrett in the tamous Brice and Sully and Ives, and Stayner deals, in March, 1887, to obtain possession of the Baltimore and Onio was an interesting feature of his career. The Sully affair contemplated a great railroad combination, including the Baltimore and Onio, the Jersey Central and the old Richmond and Danville bination, including the Baltimore and Onlo, the Jersey Central and the old Richmond and Danville systems. Suily was then president of the Richmond Terminal Company. It was said that Jay Gould was benind Brice and Suily. Brice and Suily had a number of conferences with Mr. Garrett. The enterprise is said to have failed on account of the Jealousy of certain members of the Richmond Terminal Company toward Suily and Brice.

The Ives and Stayner deal followed soon after. These men got up a syndicate and took an option from Mr. Garrett to buy $5,900 shares of Baltimore from Mr. Garrett to buy $5,900 shares of Baltimore option was to expire on April I, but it was extended, and the matter hung fire for several months, but was finally declared off by Mr. Garrett because Ives and Stayner could not set enough money to make good their promises. Then Ives entered suit against Mr. Garrett to recover the money paid on account and for breach of contract.

Mr. Garrett went to Europe soon after this, and made every effort to tide the Baltimore and Ohio over its impending financial troubles. He sold figores is impending financial troubles. He sold figores is impending financial troubles. He sold fig. 1000.

The Baltimore and Ohio telegraph system was sold to the Western Union during his absence. Mr. Garrett at once resigned the presidency of the Baltimore and Ohio, and, acting under advice of his physicians, started on a tour around the world, accompanied by a number of relatives and friends. The death by drowning of his brother. T. Harrison Garrett, whose yacht was sunk in the Patapsco River, brought him home on July 15, 1888.

Mr. Garrett was closeted with William H. Vanderbit at the latter's home in New-York when Mr. Vanderbit fell dead almost in his arms. They were discussing Baltimore and Ohio affairs at the time.

AFTER HIS RETIREMENT.

Since 1888 Mr. Garrett had not taken any active part in business affairs, as the state of his health made an entire cessation from business cares imperative. He travelled extensively both in this country and abroad. In most of his travels he was accompanied by his wife, Mary F. Garrett, daughter of William F. Frick, a leading member of the Baltimore bar. He spent his time when not traveiling at Newport and Bar Harbor, at his country seat, "Uplands," near Baltimore, or at his handsome home in Mount Vernon Place, this city. For one year he lived on the estate called "Ringwood," in New-Jersey, which he leased from ex-Mayor Hewitt, of New-Jork.

The private charitles of Mr. and Mr. Garrett when in his prime was a handsome man. He had mild, blue eyes and wore side whiskers. He was fond out outdoor sports, especially shooting, and had a private range and traps at "Uplands." He was a member of all the leading clube of Baltimore and of several in New-York. The Garretts were among the leaders of Baltimore society and well-known as entertainers before the breaking down of Mr. Garrett's health. In 1886 Mr. Garrett built a magnificent mansion on Monument Hill, Baltimore. The extension of the front portleo caused a long litigation, brought by Henry James, Mr. Garrett's neighbor, who sileged that it hindered his view down Monument Square.

Out of England this is not considered to be a fitting punishment for the attempt to steal a quiet and unoffending Republic.

IT SPOILS CHAMBERLAIN'S FIREWORKS.

From The Baltimore American. The immediate result will be to weaken Mr. Chamberiain at home. He is, to a large extent, a pyrocechnical politician, and with such the pyrotechnics must be continuous. They have not only died out in this instance, but it looks as if they cannot be again lighted without incurring serious danger.

MR. AUSTIN SHOULD HARNESS PEGASUS. From The Philadelphia Times.

Rhodes is off in Matabeleland and Mr. Chamber-lain hesitates to call him in, lest he should decline to come. And Uncle Kruger is still unappeared. It is a curious situation the English got themselves into when they ran up unexpectedly against that stolid Dutchman. And meanwhile the newspaper poet who sang Jameson's praises has been made Poet Laureate. The present occasion would seem to call for some supplementary verses from Mr. Austin.

THE RIGHT SORT OF PUBLICITY.

AN INCIDENT SHOWING THE EFFECT OF GOOD CREDIT AND A TRIBUNE ADVERTISEMENT.

To the Editor of The Tribune. Sir: The benefit of advertising was not only exemplified in the last few days, but the financial standing of the city of Mount Vernon proved to be known by others than the business man and other residents of the city itself.

The Tribune was the only New-York paper which the advertisement was inserted asking for blds for the proposed issue of $55,000 school bonds. which the advertisement was inserted asking for bids for the proposed issue of $55,000 school bonds, and the returns were very gratifying indeed. Not only were the bids large in number (aggregating over one million dollars), but they came from New-York, Cincinnati and Boston, and the prices offered showed that the bankers of the country have learned what our people themselves know, that Mount Vernon's financial standing is equal to that of New-York City.

It proves also that The Tribune is read by the money world.

DR. JOHN H. M'GIVERN'S WILL.

The will of Dr. John H. McGivern, of No. 150 East One-hundred-and-eleventh-st., was filed yesterday at the Surrogate's office. No statement was made of the value of the property distributed by the will. Dr. McGivern provides that his carriages and horses shall be sold within one month from the time of his death, the proceeds to form part of MARPIED.

and horses shall be sold within one month from the time of his death, the proceeds to form part of his estate. He gives his medical library to his friend, Dr. Zenas L. Leonard. The remainder of the property is left in trust to his executors. He instructs them to provide for the suitable care, maintenance and education of his daughter, and maintenance and education of his daughter, and requests that she be educated in Canada, where his parents now reside. The income of the remainder of the property is left to his wife. Ida T. McGivern. At her death the property will go to his daughter absolutely. If she shall not survive her mother, he provides that at the death of the latter the estate be divided between some of his relatives.

BEQUESTS OF NATHAN F. GRAVES.

Syracuse, N. Y., July 29.-The principal bequest of the will of the late Nathan F. Graves, of this city, provides for the erection of a home in Syra-cuse for poor and indigent aged people.
